The eDelivery project, aimed at developing and implementing an electronic document delivery solution for individuals and legal entities, was successfully completed in late December.

The project, which lasted two years, involved the Croatian Post, the Ministry of Justice and Public Administration and the IT company Sedam IT, which developed all the necessary software components.

The project has created technical and procedural conditions for completely digital delivery of registered mail in accordance with the eIDAS Regulation of the European Union.

The realization of this project continues and builds upon the existing cooperation between the Ministry of Justice and Public Administration and the Croatian Post.

The total value of the project is 310 thousand euros, and 75% of the amount was co-financed by grants from the Connecting Europe Facility (CEF).
